

Sausage sentences submitted to WritingFix by users:

A simple single sausage sentence:

Your red dog gets sad during games since every year rules seem much harder, right?

submitted by Meg, seven-year-old WritingFix user

An entire sausage story:

It tempted Dot to observe every yearning, going gaga amongst the effluvial, lachrymose exhortations so omnipresent that time. Each hardened despair rallied Dot to obsequent thrills: Sadness spurred delight, tautness sallied divine enjoyment, terror redeemed Dot. This salacious stew was seen not to obviate ecstasied Dot's sympathies; she empathized, definitely, yet the everflowing grimness surrounding gray youth held Dot to obdurate emotions sublime. Each heaved desolation needled Dot to overcompensation: Needing gaiety, yet thinking gloom might triumph, her reflexes spawned delectable euphoria; as sorrow waxed, Dot turned dourness sideways, smiling gleefully. Yet this subversive evil (love) eroded despair rarely; yet that trouper refused defeat. Twain newlyweds: Sad diaspora, and Dot.

submitted by Paul Kershaw, adult WritingFix user

